

What is Treasure Hunt?

As supervised by a domineering Pirate with a peg leg and a really bad attitude, Treasure Hunt is a game reserved for scurvy knaves and escaped convicts whose idea of working for a living consists of nothing more than clicking a computer mouse in the hopes of uncovering a hidden treasure "buried" beneath one of the shimmering pixels comprising the computer map on your monitor.

While we stomp our peg legs and raise our beer mugs to your courage, we do not suggest that you give up your day-glow job, if you should be fortunate enough to have one: Treasure Hunting can be finger-breaking work to those not accustomed to it.

Be prepared to be yelled at, cursed, and given a thoroughly foul tongue-lashing by the domineering Pirate we put in charge of this little escapade. After all, while we want you to win, we also want you to know that you just can't steal our treasure without taking some abuse for it.

Our Pirate Captain has absolutely no patience with inept mouse-clickers, shirkers with an extraordinarily long streak of bad luck, or shipwrecked types who can't find treasure when it's put right in front of their eyes.

But, if you've got the stomach for it, you better get aboard quickly, because the game runs in ten-minute segments, and whoever finds the treasure first in those ten-minute segments, gets to keep it.

Underneath the shimmering pixels of our treasure map, we've scattered all kinds of real world prizes --from icoins you can spend to enter our drawings, to $10,000 in cash that you can spend wisely in an expensive department store, blow off during a wild night in Rio, or use to head north to Alaska, far away from our lovable, but foul-smelling, abusive Pirate.

Heck, we don't care how you spend the dough. There are no restrictions. You don't even have to send us any receipts. Just have fun. We know you're unlikely to find treasure on your very first click, so we figure that if you can take all the abuse our Pirate will dish out while you're clicking off the pixels, you'll deserve a vacation after that!
